Hi Angela

I think the attached is the most important one – the response we provided to Matt Bardo to various questions. There has been lots of to-ing and fro-ing with emails since but we know very little more about the allegations.

The other interviewees they have are: Charles McLaughlin, defence expert witness Misra case, James Arbuthnot, Mark Button legal expert (not known to us), Fujitsu whistleblower, Ian Henderson plus of course the three people in the cases Panorama are examining.

I think the existing brief I sent you still covers the main areas i.e. conduct of prosecution, reliability of system (and remote access), individual cases. The programme appears to be very focussed on the cases and the prosecution in those cases. So I suggest we pick a tough question or two for each of these (we can edit but just need to make sure we get some good soundbites from it that address . But, based on feedback from the calls over last couple of days, it will be good if you can

- We can reassure everyone who works for and with the Post Office and our millions of customers that there's no problem with the Horizon system
- importance of transforming the business, the confidence we can have and can provide to those who want to work with us now and in future
- Although unfortunately there is some campaigning by a small number of people, we have done the right thing, we have nothing to hide

I attach our latest statement – in draft – to Panorama. This is designed for them to use on screen in context of various allegations (hence some repetition).

Does this make sense?

Mel

Mel,

Would you please send me the correspondence between us and BBC so that I'm sighted on this. Any other further info or changes to what you've sent me previously?

Thanks,
Angela
