

CORE NARRATIVE

- We have taken a thorough and rigorous approach. This is right for the business given the concerns expressed and right for the scheme applicants given the importance to them personally: we take our responsibilities very seriously
- There is no evidence from the work undertaken over the last 2 years that Horizon does not work as it should – but every individual case is important and is being handled properly
- It is important to stress though that the cases represent a tiny minority of the thousands of Post Offices and tens of thousands of Post Office colleagues who have successfully operated Post Office systems week in week out over the last decade

Thank you for this opportunity to attend this session on the Post Office mediation scheme. We set up the scheme in 2013 to give the small number of people with complaints about our system a chance to make their case - and for each case to be thoroughly investigated and independently considered.

We have now investigated all but one of the cases put to us. It has taken longer than we would have liked but a thorough approach has been critical. Mediation activity continues after these case by case investigations.

The investigation of cases that has been undertaken has reinforced our confidence that the Horizon system works as it should.

We have approached the scheme with the utmost seriousness and rigour. The Post Office is part of the fabric of the nation, with 11,500 branches, most of them small businessmen and women, serving 17m people every week. The scheme is dealing with 136 cases from half a million Horizon users over the last decade.

Thanks to the rigour of the work that has been done, we can continue to be confident in our system and continue to be committed to improving in those cases where we can do better for the people who work in our branches: all the more important as we continue to transform our business for the better.
