Simon

Amended statement attached. Having re-read the statement, this looks like a pure typo to me.

Kind regards

Simon. Happy to make the change but am out of the office today. Would Monday be ok?

I think Ron is right. The double negative doesn't make much sense. Can we get it amended?

Thanks Simon.

Looks as though there's a typo in the final sentence of the following para:

The programme that was being tested at the time would also not have generated any REMs. This is used where there is a transfer of stock to or from head office. This was not relevant to the current project and so I do not believe there would not have been any test REMs generated.

I don't think there should be a double negative there.

Best regards. Ron.
