Lesley,

The ruling with Castleton is attached along with a summary. There were extensive allegations made in relation to Horizon being the cause of the losses, all of which are reviewed point by point in the judgement. With regards the specific point on a system bug, our witness recalls that this was discussed under cross examination so should be in the witness statements if not in the ruling.

The most relevant part on quick read seems to be point 23.

Alwen,

I understand the bug was spoken about in the Castleton case (I wasn't personally involved). It was definitely spoken about in the Misra case where it was interrogated about it at length. Other cases where it was mentioned were settled out of court as far as I know.

Does that clarify things?

The question was really about whether the defect had been spoken about in open court other than in the Misra case as it helps that it was in the public domain and not 'covered up' in any way

Thanks

Simon,

I'm not aware of any other specific bugs being discussed in court (either related to Horizon or HNG-X).

The Falkirk bug was first raised in the Castleton Civil case and was then picked up on for a number of subsequent Criminal cases even though it was irrelevant to those environments. Defence experts were using it as an example that Horizon has had bugs.

Gareth

Gareth

You mention discussing the falkirk bug in the Misra case today, are there any other examples where bugs have been discussed in court.

Simon
